He has an excellent talent for mathematics and programming (C++, Matlab, Python). He has a deep knowledge of computational neuroscience. He can biophysically model spiking neural networks from a single cell to a complex network. Furthermore, he can apply machine learning tools to process biological signals and classify recorded data.

Generally, he is passionate about neuroscience and particularly interested in computational modeling and processing of biological signals. As well as learning new things, he is very good at teaching them to others. He is an inherent learner and teacher. A combination of these qualities, along with his hard work in facing new challenges in science, makes him a perfect candidate to pursue an academic career.

I consider him intelligent, hardworking, a team player, and creative. Comparing Mehdi with others, I evaluate his overall ability in the top 1%. I am confident that he will have no problem continuing his studies in your program and I highly recommend him to pursue his career at your university.
